

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

INTRODUCTION

THE first portion of this Register, down to the end of the year 1714, has already appeared in print in Appendices to the second and third volumes (published in 1898 and 1901 respectively), of the 'Calendar of the Inner Temple Records,' edited by F. A. Inderwick, one of the Masters of the Bench. The type was kept standing, with the idea that it might afterwards be found desirable to print the complete Register. This has now been done by order of the Library Committee of the Inner Temple, with the consent and support of the Society of the Middle Temple.

The Register is contained in three volumes, and covers a period of 224 years, the earliest entry being dated February 19, 1628 [-29], and the latest, May 28, 1853. The entries from May 3, 1695 to January 2, 1704 [-05] have for some reason been copied into volume i, the originals being at the beginning of volume ii. In other places it seems as if several entries had been made at the same time, probably from memorandum slips. There are a few transpositions, and at least one serious omission. On the fly-leaf of volume ii. is a list of 'Fees due to the Buttlers for the Buriall of a Gent out of Middle Temple Hall,' dated April 19, 1726.<sup>1</sup>

Dr. Micklethwaite, by whose order this 'Catalogue of Burialls' was begun, had a stormy Mastership; but in this matter he did good service. The use of the untechnical word 'Catalogue' (altered to 'Register' in 1639) probably implies that no previous Register existed in 1628. None at any rate has come down to us, and very little is known about earlier burials. Traditional names are assigned to some of the knightly effigies, and Dugdale<sup>1</sup> quotes some thirty-five epitaphs of dates prior to 1628, chiefly Elizabethan and Jacobean. The fine monuments of Edmund Plowden (d. 1585) and Richard Martin (d. 1618) are still to be found in the triforium, but early brasses had already disappeared when Dugdale wrote. For half the time over which its history extends the Temple Church is a shrine of unremembered dead.

The total number of interments recorded in the Register is not far short of 2,500, an average of eleven a year over the whole period. At first the Churchyard was only occasionally used as a burial place. An exception to this rule occurs in 1665, when 16 out of 22 entries record that interment took place in the Churchyard. Against 12 of these, running from August 8 to November 17, and all but consecutive, the words 'Of the plague' are added in another but apparently not much later hand. But in 1661, also a year of exceptional mortality, out of 33 burials all but 3 were in the Church. Altogether during the thirty-five years ending in 1662 some 60 burials had taken place in the Round, and 250 in the Oblong Church. From the scale of charges for the ground<sup>2</sup> we can infer the order of dignity attaching to different parts of the Church as burial sites. There were five grades: (1) the high chancel, (2) the choir, (3) the side aisles, (4) the long walk down the centre, (5) the round walk. Soon after 1680 it was clearly becoming impossible to find additional room for graves in the Oblong Church; earth was accordingly brought in for filling up the side and middle aisles, and a marble floor was laid down.<sup>3</sup> As a temporary expedient, burial was resumed in the Round (or 'Rounds' as it began to be called), in which 63 interments took place during the six years ending in 1687. Meanwhile arrangements were being made for the construction of vaults, a mode of burial which up to this date is only once or twice mentioned in the Register. In 1684 the Inner Temple paid £60 'to Horne the bricklayer for making a burying vault.'<sup>4</sup> The Middle Temple vault was probably made about the same time. The earliest entries of burials in the new vaults occur in 1689. From an order fixing the burial fee for the Inner Temple vault, we learn that 'the Master is debarred from burying anyone in the chancel or body of the Church.'<sup>1</sup> Interments did not, however, entirely cease in the Church, though from the beginning of the eighteenth century onwards the vaults (which were enlarged about 1836) and the Churchyard became the regular burial places. On a plan of the Temple by John Ogilby, dated 1677, the only piece of ground marked as the Churchyard is on the north side of the Church. A fence is shown running across this, opposite the second buttress from the east end of the Church; the small piece thus inclosed to the west of the Master's house was doubtless the 'inner' or 'little' Churchyard, which is once or twice mentioned in the Register. The occasional occurrence<sup>2</sup> of the phrase, 'the north Churchyard,' shows that interments also took place on the south side of the Church, and there is other evidence of this.

At an Inner Temple Bench Table held on May 14, 1813, it was ordered 'that in future no corpse be interred in the Body or Rounds of the Temple Church.' A similar order was made by the Middle Temple on February 6, 1818. On November 20, 1840, a further order is made: 'No interments to take place in the Churchyard,' and thenceforward burials were restricted to the vaults of the two Societies. Burials finally ceased in accordance with the terms of the Act, 15 and 16 Vic., c. 85, 'An Act to amend the Laws concerning the Burial of the Dead in the Metropolis.' Under Schedule A the Inner and Middle Temples were made, for the purposes of this Act, part of the Metropolis. The ground on the north side of the Church was excavated in 1861.

The sum total of burials is increased by the large number of foundlings (198) who died in infancy.<sup>3</sup> From 1700-1773 the entries are especially numerous, and on one occasion three infants were buried in one grave. The surname given was almost invariably Temple or Templer. The Register of Baptism shows that in all 251 foundlings were baptized. Baptism or the record of it may have been omitted in some cases, but even so the death rate is remarkable. At the Foundling Hospital, however, out of 15,000 children received between 1756 and 1760 only 4,400 survived to be apprenticed. If the incorporation of the Hospital in 1739 did not lessen the number of infants exposed in the Temple, this was due to the liberality of the two

Societies.<sup>1</sup> An indenture of apprenticeship, dated November 2, 1756, shows that a fee of eight guineas was then paid for putting a girl to domestic service. The last survivor of the Temple foundlings, Mary Ann Littlefield, who received 6s. a week from the Middle Temple and 5s. a week from the Inner Temple up to the time of her death in 1865, may claim a place in literary history. She is said to have been the original of 'Miss Flite,' in Dickens's 'Bleak House.' She lived within the precincts of the Temple, and was very eccentric.<sup>2</sup>

There is a touch of pathos about the care taken in some of the earlier entries to mark the exact site of a grave, so that it might be afterwards identified: 'under the 2nd stone northward in the 3rd rowe from the steps'; 'under the second broken stone from the middle doore of the quire'; 'belowe the steps above the crosse isle neere the little seate on the Inner Temple syde'; and so forth. Successive restorations have destroyed these landmarks, but the details given have often a high topographical importance. Master Inderwick has pointed out what light they throw on the varying position of the communion table, and has based on them a general description of the internal appearance of the Church during the Mastership of Dr. Littleton (1639-44).<sup>3</sup> This topographical aspect of the Register is full of interest. Space does not allow me to discuss the subject here, but I hope before long to reconstruct in some detail a plan of the Church as it appeared in the first half of the seventeenth century.

Other entries are interesting in other ways. A stranger drops down dead of the plague in the Middle Temple Walks. Bodies of drowned men are found under the wall at the bottom of the Gardens. Three entries in 1733 recall the murder in Tanfield Court of a lady with her companion and maid by Sarah Malcolm,<sup>4</sup> whose portrait Hogarth painted in the condemned cell. The note 'buried in linen' (1799), reminds us of the Act (on the Statute Book for 120 years), which ordered that all dead bodies should be buried in woollen shrouds. Some of the earlier entries contain the words 'at night,' and the picturesqueness of these torch-light ceremonies stirs our imagination. Selden's elaborate funeral in 1654, of which Aubrey has left an interesting contemporary account, took place at night, though this is not stated in the Register. The body was committed to its marble sepulchre without prayer, song or ceremony; but two addresses were given.<sup>1</sup> Most of the funerals recorded were of a far humbler kind. A great many servants of the two Societies and their families were buried in and round the Church. The entries include butlers, gardeners, porters, watchmen, cooks, laundresses, 'panier-men,' 'wash-potts,' 'turnebroches' and 'periwigg-makers.' In many of these entries there is a record that no charge was made for burial fees. This sometimes takes a quaint form: 'Master and ground given.'

The Roll-call of Temple Worthies buried within the precincts includes a large number of Masters of the Bench of the two Honourable Societies.<sup>2</sup> The following were Judges: Sir George Vernon, who pronounced ship-money legal (1639), Sir William Morton, who fought on the royalist side (1672), Sir John Vaughan (1674),<sup>3</sup> Sir Timothy Littleton (1679), Sir William Wilde (1679), Vere Bartue (1681), Sir Edmund Saunders (1683), Sir William Dolben (1694), Richard Wallop (1697), Sir George Treby, one of the counsel for the Seven Bishops (1700), Sir Henry Hatsell (1714), Sir Samuel Dodd (1716), Chief Baron Lant of Scotland (1741), Lord Chancellor Thurlow (1806),<sup>4</sup> Sir Richard Richards (1823), Sir George Wood (1824), Sir James Burrough (1837), Sir John Williams (1846) and Lord Langdale (1851). A few other lawyers among many eminent in various ways may be mentioned: John White, parliamentarian, called 'Century White' (1645), Sir John King (1677), Sir John Tremayne, author of 'Placita Coronæ' (1694), Sir Clement Wearg (1726), Thomas Lutwyche (1734), Nicolas Fazakerley (1767), Sir Robert Chambers (1803), John Williams (1810), Alexander Popham, prison reformer

(1810), Sir John Hippisley (1825), John de Grenier Fonblanque (1837), Sir William Follett (1845), Sir Charles Wetherell (1846), Thomas Starkie (1849), Horace Twiss (1849), F. Newman Rogers (1851) and Sir Robert Comyn (1853). John Selden (1654) claims rank both in law and literature. The following men of letters were in most cases also lawyers: James Howell, author of 'Epistolæ Ho-elianæ' (1666), William Petyt, antiquary, keeper of the records in the Tower (1707), Matthew Concanen, known for his controversy with Pope (1749), Anthony Allen, antiquary (1754), Oliver Goldsmith (1774), Daines Barrington, antiquary and naturalist (1800), Anthony Champion, minor poet (1801), and James Boswell the younger, editor of Shakespeare (1822). A few scientific names occur: Peter Ball, M.D., original F.R.S. (1675), Richard Mead, M.D., eminent physician and natural philosopher (1754), and John Bevis, M.D., astronomer (1771). Of Masters or ex-Masters of the Temple the following were buried within its precincts: John Littleton, D.D. (1658), Ralph Brownrigg, D.D. (1659), Richard Ball, D.D. (1684), Gregory Sharpe, LL.D. (1771), George Watts, M.A. (1772), and the Right Rev. Thomas Thurlow, D.D., Lord Bishop of Durham (1791).

As we go from Fleet Street to the Temple Church, bustle and noise are succeeded by peace and quiet. Something of this sense of peacefulness comes to us as we turn the pages of these burial records. The noise of contention in the Law Courts has died away; the bustle of life is over. The dead are at rest. Requiem eternam dona eis, Domine.
